The Passengers of the Wrecked Steamer Evening Star.

NEW YORK, October 9 .- The papers this morning contain a list of the cabin passeners on board the wrecked steamer Evening Star. There were 165 in the cabin, including 73 females. It is reported that among the passengers was a French troupe of sixty persons, who went aboard immediately from the Havre steamer without effeeting a landing. The boat was valued at $400,000, upon which there was no insurance.

Now the Evening Star Procured her Passengers. From the New York News, October 2.

On Saturday the steamship Evening Star sailed from this port for New Orleans, bearing hence eighty-seven prostitutes. It is a custom among the matrons of the large assignation houses of Savannah, New Orleans, and other southern cities, at the opening of the fall season, to visit the northern States and spend a month or six weeks in seeking and selecting the most fascinating beauty that may be found in the houses of prostitution in New York, Bos-100, and Philadelphia, and these they consign to their bagnios in the South. Last month, Bianca Robbins, Jennie King, Flora Bedell, Susan Kingsley, and several other well-known keepers of fashionable ons of pollution in New Orleans, arrived in this city, and at once commenced their search for a supply of fresh victims to till the places of those of whom they had been relieved by removal or death. After weeks they succeed in procuring the number requisite to fill their almost deserted arems; and on this occasion the number who embarked on board the Evening Star was, as we have already said, eighty-seven, me of them the most accomplished, landsomest, and unscrupulous lorettes to be found in the gilded brothels of this city. Every available state-room on the Eveaing Star which could be procured had been engaged in advance of the hour of sailing, and into these were packed two or three girls to each room. So sudden had been this arrangement that passengers who were bound to the Crescent City on busisiness found themselves deprived of the ordinary accommodations by this remarkable cargo of the lost.

Bianca Robbins, well known throughout the South as the mistress of one of the most elegant and costly houses in New Orleans, secured accommodations for and shipped twenty. Jennie King, of almost nally extensive reputation, managed for the transportation of twenty; while Flora
